Game on for donating artwork to basketball auction

When my friend Paula Buscher, head women's basketball coach at Bradley University, asked if I would donate a piece of art to her basketball program's silent auction last month, I said, "Coach, count me in."

To the right is the trio I donated, showing a series of framed abstracts painted with complementary color combinations. Good news: My artwork, "Revisiting Rothko" scored at the event and was sold to the highest bidder.

Where art happens

Studio 825 Opens in Arts Warehouse District

I enjoyed designing this logo for Jeff Embry, owner of the new arts space Studio 825 located at 825 SW Adams in the heart of the Warehouse District in Peoria, Illinois. Jeff's new gallery officially opens on Friday, November 4 from 5 - 9 PM during the CIAO downtown gallery walk, so plan to stop by where you'll see lots of art and sculpture, along with several of my larger abstract paintings.

PhotoFunia: Face it; you're fun

There's a free photo enhancement program on-line called PhotoFunia.com that can create hundreds of special effects using your own photos. In this photo enhancement, it looks like some of my logos and paintings are on display at a fancy art gallery. The best part of all is that my pieces of art look over a dozen feet tall. Illusion aside, wouldn't any artist like to see his/her work on display like this in real life?
